This programme explores different aspects of Human Resources Management (HRM) in China's changing environment. Participants will analyse both Western and Chinese management practices and their relevance to running a business in China today. In past years, the programme has benefited from the participation of both Chinese and expatriate managers jointly examining HRM in a Chinese context.

Objective

The objective of the programme is to analyse the changing role of the human resources department and identify ways in which the human resources function can add value to the business.

Who Should Attend

Besides managers with experience in personnel and HRM in China, the programme brings benefits to all middle to senior executives who are responsible for people development and management. The past participants included China market and public relations directors, vice-presidents, financial controllers, chief representatives, section heads, and field development, office, sales, area, new business and programme managers.

Fee: RMB 33,800

The Human Resources Management programme offered by CEIBS has proved to be highly beneficial for business supervisors and professional human resources executives. By giving a large number of cases related to different industries and different development phases within a same company, the course has greatly enlightened the participants. The theory of human resources management, which was smartly integrated into the programme, turned out to be very instructive for enterprises. The analysis tools, models and methods offered by the programme also generated practical value for participants.
